

Regarding the Consumer Bankers Association (CBA) attempt to impose the federal "established business relationship" exemption on Indiana consumers, my comment is simply this: I pay for the phone service to my home, I should be able to dictate who can contact me via the phone service I pay for. Members of the CBA and other phone solicitors have many other options for contacting me and advertising their services that do not involve the use of the phone service I pay for. For instance, they can contact me by mail, television ads, or radio ads. They should have no entitlement to use my personal phone service.
